Q: Set statusBarTintColor multiple times in iOS App I have set status bar tint color in AppDelegate by, `[UIApplication sharedApplication].statusBarStyle = UIStatusBarStyleBlackOpaque;` When I read the source code in AppDelegate, status bar color only changed once at the Application Delegate. But when I open a new ViewController, it changes status bar color to black again. How can I change status bar color multiple times in AppDelegate? A:

`[UIApplication sharedApplication].statusBarStyle = UIStatusBarStyleBlackOpaque;` is setting the status bar once, when the UIApplication is loaded, in AppDelegate, no matter how many times you call this. When I open a new ViewController, it changes status bar color to black again. to set the status bar style multiple times, you have to do this: Add the following code in your AppDelegate: `[UIApplication sharedApplication].preferredStatusBarStyle = UIStatusBarStyleLightContent;` Add the following code in your ViewController:

`-(void)viewWillAppear:(BOOL)animated { [super viewWillAppear:animated]; [UIApplication sharedApplication].preferredStatusBarStyle = UIStatusBarStyleLightContent; }` Without this code, the default status bar color in iOS would be black, and every view controller you open would reset this style back to black.

Theatre movement A theatre movement or play movement is a group of members who practice theatre together in a continuous and ad-hoc working relationship. In contrast to a theatrical company, a theatre movement is not a company which shows its productions on a regular basis, nor is it a very permanent arrangement in which all members get to work together on a consistent basis. A theatre movement is considered less formal than a collective and may include members who only get together once, a few times, or only occasionally. Theatre movements may be ad hoc and temporary, or permanent, usually with a history spanning multiple generations. The members may also have varying interests in the theatre that they work in, or a common interest. A theatre movement differs from a theatre collective in that it does not attempt to collect a large fund, to draw up a charter, to assess the viability of the ventures before them, to manage themselves financially, to run the business, to advertise, or to present productions where the members feel they do not have enough power. A theatre movement is usually focused around a particular style, genre, or discipline of the theatre.

The canon of a particular theatre movement is usually defined by the plays, performances, performers, directors, and venues that the members regularly produce. The lines between movements are often blurred. For example, Dans Le Noir is a theatre movement within the French theatre, whereas the troupe also has links to the avant-garde movement. Theatre movements are usually less hierarchical than organisations of the same name. If a group is drawn from a large company and has only one show, they are likely to be run by the company's press department. This can also be the case of a theatre company which has only one show on at any one time, such as the Adjournalment Theatre Company, or another theatre company which frequently performs many shows with many different actors. Not every organization with the name 'theatre movement' is actually a movement in itself. Many are actually performance groups, in a context such as cabaret or burlesque, or even just the director of a company.

Names There is no authoritative list of theatre movements. The following is a list of some of the more well-known theatre movements of the 20th century, with a list of the names of the movements and the country or state where they are active. This list is not intended to be an authoritative list of theatre movements but rather a guide to the way that these movements appear in
